No Gauging of German Successes Until Extent of Retreat Is Known.

Washington, March 23. - Army offipials today awaited eagerly fuller details of the break in the British defensive eyetem west of St. Quentin, reported by London. Until the extent of the retirement of the British lines is revealed there is no means of gauging the strategic possibilities of the German successes. Observers found comfort in the fact that announcement of withdrawal came from British, not German sources, and also in the orderly movement of the British to new positions. ment of the British to new positions.

Those facts, they feel, preclude the possibility that a large sector of the British position has been overwhelmed and a grave threat created at the security of the whole line in that region. It was thought likely the British withdrawal might leave the German withdrawal might leave the German forces in an embarrassing position, possibly holding a salient projecting into the German lines and assailable by counter-attack from three sides,

This led to the belief that one or more of the advanced posts of the British front were cut off on the first rush and the surrender was made necessary because supply and ammunition connections had been severed.

It is not unlikely, it is said, It is not unlikely, it is said, that the movements established the Germans in positions of such strategio value as to have forced the abandon-ment of a considerable sector of the front involved.

Chattanooga Sends Clothing to Belgium

A carload of clothing for the Belgian men, women and children has been collected by the Red Cross committee as a result of the campaign here, The campaign for clothing to be donated for the relief of suffering Belbeen running under high pressure to the present in an effort to secure at least a carload. The campaign closes today and shipment will be made on Monday of all goods received. The shipment will include suits for men, women and children, and a large supply of baby clothes. One notable feature of the campaign is a dainty little outfit for an infant and a baby's quilt and sheet made by Mrs. T. W. Gamble, 79 years old. The stitches are as neat and accurate as those made by a younger person.
